

CANADA IS READY FOR RECIPROCITY

Parliament Leader Believes Advantage Is Mutual.

Ottawa, Nov. 21.—The first business session of the eleventh Parliament opened this afternoon and the reciprocity question immediately came to the front. Mr. McGovern said that the country was entitled to know what benefits might be expected from the negotiations of the treaty and on what manufactures or products there would be a lowering of duties.

Mr. Borden, the opposition leader, quoted figures to show that while Canada had purchased considerable more from United States during the past four years than she had from Great Britain the average percentage of duty was greater on British goods than on United States goods, and in this he saw a discrimination against Great Britain.

Canada, in the past, is ready to go to Washington; to-day the United States had come to Ottawa, Mr. McGovern said. He said that both countries had come to know one another better and to realize that they were the two great nations of the North American continent. Peace between them had existed for over a hundred years, and this was a notable demonstration to the rest of the world. The action of the government in this matter of reciprocity was that of a sensible business man. What Canada said to the United States was:

"We are pleased to discuss trade relations with you. If we can come to an agreement satisfactory to both countries so much the better; if not no harm has been done."

To take the view that the government should not negotiate at all was totally unbusinesslike. Under the particular circumstances secured of the conference any argument for or against it should not be advanced. Mr. McGovern also made a touching reference to the death of Mr. Hoyt, which he was sure would be reechoed throughout the country.

At the evening session of the House of Commons Sir Wilfrid Laurier indignantly attacked the position of Mr. Borden with reference to reciprocity with the United States, saying that Mr. Borden and his political associates advocated eschewing trade relations as they would eschew pestilence.

This, said Sir Wilfrid, was not a reasonable or sincere position, and he did not think that it appealed to the reason of the country. Sir Wilfrid in closing said that even if a reciprocity treaty were concluded the British preference would not be interfered with.

His Wilfrid's speech was well received, and it was evident that he and his party, which is the government, are thoroughly committed to speedy negotiation of a reciprocity treaty with the United States.

JAMES V. WHITE.
An honest man has passed away and rests beneath the silent sod Who loved his fellow, on this sod And ever believed in truth and God.
His heart was true and brave and bold And helped the poor and weak with gold And in the mart of deed or word He worked for human brotherhood.
He saw strange men from hour to hour Yet greeted them in sun or shower With laughter, love, and generous hand As fine as any in his land.
His home was in all in to him And round his board, filled to the brim, The wine of life and love prevailed Where every guest was cheered and hailed.

Good Liver Remedy Free

When you suffer from any form of indigestion it is always well to take something for the liver, as usually the trouble lies there. If you are bilious, have a bloated feeling after eating, if you belch, if your skin is yellowish, you may be sure it is liver trouble.

What you need is something to stir up the liver, to arouse the gastric juices so that they will aid in the digestion of your food. A very good remedy for this, and one highly recommended by those who have used it, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which you can obtain at any drugist at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. But if you have any doubt about its merits, and would prefer to try it first, send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will promptly send you a free sample bottle.

Thousands of people first learned of this remarkable cure for stomach, liver, and bowel trouble through a free sample. Mrs. Frank Lilly, of Plainville, Ill., sent for one and it cured her and she is open in saying that she will never take pills or strong cathartics again, as Syrup Pepsin acts so mildly. Mr. W. L. Bryant, the postmaster at Sardis, Tenn., says he will never be without it again. No sick person can afford to ignore a remedy so highly indorsed as this. It is good for all the family from infancy to old age, because it is mild, free from gripping, and yet promptly effective. Furthermore, results are absolutely guaranteed or money will be refunded.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specially provided for the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 241 Caldwell Building, Monticello, Ill.

PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDY OF THE INDIAN.

THE GUIDE.

One of the remarkable collection made by Mr. Moon and now on exhibit at the new National Museum.

At the new National Museum Mr. Karl Moon, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has been exhibiting a remarkable collection of photographic studies of the Indians of the Southwest, from Colorado to California. Mr. Moon, who has been engaged in this work for seven years, was attracted to it first by its wonderful artistic possibilities, and though it is as sheer artistry that his remarkable collection of "studies" will have its most popular and therefore its widest appeal, it is from an ethnological standpoint that his pictures have come to be regarded as of the greatest value.

The exhibit is contained in one of the exhibition rooms at the Smithsonian Museum, and it covers the four walls. The photographs are all of large size, being enlarged by a special process by Mr. Moon from smaller negatives taken in the field. The range of subjects is a wide one. There are portrait heads, marvelous in their fidelity to nature, of Apaches, Taos, San Juan, Santa Clara, Tesques, Santo Domingo, San Philippe, Laguna, Isleta, Acoma, Zuni, and other Indian tribes, including specimens of the six Hopi villages. In all, there are forty heads exhibited.

In the collection will be found the heads of some famous Indians, men whose names and deeds are inseparably connected with the founding of the Southwest. One of the most attractive artistically as it is valuable ethnologically, is the head of Tligoot, a White Mountain Apache scout, one of the leading scouts who was with

Gen. Miles in his capture of Geronimo. He is a very old man, his face is seamed with many wrinkles, and his hair is sparse. Wrapped about with his blanket, the texture of which is wonderfully displayed in the photographic study, the picture reminds one of the work of the old masters in its realism and fidelity to detail. Another striking head is that of Narahkegetus, a Jicarilla Apache. This man is well over 100 years old. He was with Kit Carson as a scout. In his youth his tribe did not name their boys until they had accomplished something, when they were named after their deeds. When Narahkegetus was about twenty-five years old he was placed as chief in command of a small war party sent against the Comanches. He outwitted the Comanches and was successful in that he killed all but two of the enemy, and thus he got his name, which, translated, means "Less Two."

Then there is a remarkable head of Poco Thianny, said to be the oldest living medicine man, of the Navajos, and another head of Meguelito, another medicine man, whose photographic study shows him facing the setting sun, the fading light throwing into high relief the deep lines and marvelous character of the face.

In addition to the heads, there are numerous photographic studies, which have all the quality of perfected pictures—the effect the photographer was striving for—but which also have quite a few ethnological records. One of the best of these, "The Guide," The Washington Herald reproduces with this article.

To give some idea of the artistic value of Mr. Moon's work, it is merely a long Apache figure coming across the mesa, but it has all the value of a painting. A striking study is "Nearing the End of the Trail," a portrait of a bent and aged Apache woman carrying a heavy water jar. It is a picture that suggests Miller in its atmospheric quality, and it has a poetical significance, too, for it is plain to be seen that the figure is nearing the end of two trails—not alone the trail that leads to her material journey, but the trail of life also.

A wonderful interior that should delight the heart of the colorist is "Home from the Hunt," which shows a Pueblo Indian sitting in front of the fire, whose flames send a soft glow about the room, and which cause his figure to stand out in bold relief. "A Hopi Mirror" shows a girl leaning over a rain pool near the ancient pueblo of Walpi, a beautiful picture, but also a faithful ethnological record.

It is probable that most of these studies will be added to the collection of the Smithsonian Museum, for to the students of ethnology their value can hardly be overestimated. A complete collection of Mr. Moon's work will be installed in the American Museum of Natural History. The Astor Library (New York) has a complete set, and private collectors have long recognized the value of these photographic records. Mr. Moon's collection is on its way to be exhibited in Chicago, but later in the year the Washington art-loving public will probably have another chance to see it.

PRESCIENCE.

"No, stranger, Bill's death was no surprise to me. I felt it coming." "But he was in perfect health." "He was till he called me a liar."

ing were sent through the mails. Of the various companies which the Continental has swallowed or says it has, the inspectors say:

"Nearly all of the men originally connected with these companies have withdrawn since the Continental started its campaign, and Mr. Malsie and others have repudiated the Continental as a concern promising impossibilities."

One of the things the Continental held out to investors was a scheme to establish a transcontinental wireless system at a small cost for new stations. Their "literature" is illustrated with pictures of well-known men listening to wireless telephone messages. There is a very fine picture of William J. Bryan posing at the listening end of a machine.

Good Roads Men to Meet.
The Washington Good Roads Association will meet to-night at the Cosmos Club. Instead of the usual business meeting, to-night's session will be devoted to a social programme.

It can safely be said that they have sold stock at par value of $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 in the various companies, have an extensive suite of offices in the Flatiron Building, this city, and at times have had offices in Cleveland, Chicago, Los Angeles, and San Francisco. During the past summer they were driven out of California by the State authorities.

In every instance they have promised large dividends on the stock sold. In addition to an increase in the value of the stock, but not in a single case have any of the companies paid any dividends, and, as stated above, practically all of them have been complete failures. The department has received several hundred complaints from people who have bought this stock and lost their money.

Specific Complaint Made.
The specific complaint on which warrants were issued for the two Burrs and Tobey charges that on March 20, 1910, the defendants, under the corporation name of Burr Brothers, "having devised a scheme to defraud Joseph Lovelace, residing at 14 Dinwood place, Charleston, Mass., by means of false and fraudulent pretenses," sent the company's "literature" through the mails.

Late in the afternoon the inspectors stopped in at the offices of the Continental Wireless Telephone and Telegraph Company, at 56 Pine street, which is also the home of the Collins Wireless Telephone Company and the Columbia Finance Corporation. These and other companies are all associated, and the minds of the post-office investigators, and they hoped to find several of the officers at home. The only one they did find was Charles L. Vaughan, an officer of the Continental Wireless, and said by the inspectors to be the treasurer of the Columbia Finance Corporation.

Mr. Vaughan, charged with using the mails in a scheme to defraud, was taken before United States Commissioner Shields and held in $10,000 bail. He couldn't raise it just then, and joined Burr brothers in the Tombs.

Started Work in May.
According to the inspectors, the Continental is an Arizona corporation, capitalized at $10,000,000, which got its papers in October, 1902, but did not get to work until last May, when the highly ornate circulars telling what the company was do-

BROWN RE-ELECTED HEAD OF THE A. A. U.

Cleveland Makes Request for Olympic Games in 1916.

New York, Nov. 21.—Athletic legislators representing the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States met to-day in national convention at the Hotel Astor. In the session were ten district associations, forming the main body of the union, and there were ten allied associations representative of other various features of amateur sport.

Track and field athletics occupied the main attention of the delegates, and what happened during the fiscal year was critically reviewed. Financial reports, records, suspensions, reinstatements, the formation of new associations, and the admission of allied bodies were passed upon, while suggestions for the advancement of sport and more stringent measures for its safe control were discussed.

Everett C. Brown, of the Central Association, presided, and he was re-elected for another term. It was expected that there would be a contest over the office, the opposing candidate being Henry G. Penniman, of the South Atlantic Association. Dr. D. E. Wilber, of Washington, D. C., nominated Penniman, but he withdrew on the spot, and the promised contest melted into the air.

A delegation from the city of Cleveland, Ohio, attended the convention and made a request for the Olympic games of 1916. The request was favorably received and turned over to the International Olympic committee of America. How the International Olympic committee would favor the American bid against Germany for the fixture is not known, and no line can be had till next June, when this committee is to meet at Berlin.

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

A MOTHER of two young girls, under twenty, writes to ask me if I do not think it wise for her to inspect her daughter's letters to men.

I can't tell her. I don't know the daughters. I hope it isn't. But I can tell her one thing, and that is, if I were she, I would much rather inspect the men than the letters.

Inspecting letters is chaperonage, and I don't believe in chaperonage. Or at least only as a last resort.

If you have daughters that you have reason to think cannot be trusted out of your sight, why must chaperon them, of course.

But isn't it infinitely wiser to spend your life trying not to have that kind of daughter?

Conventional chaperonage is a system of watching that just naturally invites the victim to try to elude it. And, however careful the system may be, it is pretty likely that the girl who really wants to do wrong will "find a way."

Emerson says: "Build walls as high as you may, you cannot keep out temptation." So it seems to me that the safest chaperonage a girl can possibly have is a bringing up amid ideals of conduct and expectations of her that will make wrong doing something not to be thought of, and give her that within herself which will successfully combat temptation.

Such an atmosphere will build an infinitely stronger wall between her and sin than any chaperonage.

But there is one way in which this atmosphere can be penetrated, and that is by the persistent influence of the wrong kind of man.

That's what I was thinking of when I advised my friend to inspect the man rather than the letters.

The unwise mother, it seems to me, is not the one who fails to chaperon her daughter everywhere or know just where she is on every occasion, but she who fails to know just what kind of a man her daughter is with.

Bring your daughter up to think of wrong doing as something with which she could not possibly be associated. Impress upon her your trust in her and the obligation of honor which that imposes. Try not to put her in the way of unnecessarily great temptation. And above all, insist that every man with whom she is at all intimate, shall be brought into the home, that you shall know something of his family and his past history, and that what you know shall meet your approval, and I don't believe you'll need to inspect your daughter's letters or chaperon her on every occasion.

Successful Membership Campaign Brought to Close.

Closing a successful three weeks' campaign of the Christian Endeavor Society, the purpose of which was to strengthen the forces in this city, Field Secretary Karl Lehmann and Mrs. Lehmann were tendered a farewell banquet and reception last night at the Calvary Baptist Church by the District Union.

E. P. Gates, president of the District Christian Endeavor Union, presided as toastmaster. The address of welcome was made by Rev. Dr. S. H. Greene, pastor of Calvary Church. Others who spoke were Miss Rosa P. Mertz, president of the Calvary Church Christian Endeavor Society; D. C. Davis, vice president of the District Union; Horace M. Gilman, secretary of the District Union; Rexford L. Holmes, superintendent of the extension department; P. S. Drury and W. E. Braithwaite, of the musical department; E. E. Mr. Lehmann, who followed, took as his subject, "Our work in Washington." That much work had been done, he admitted, but that a great deal more ought to be done he, likewise, was forced to admit. He urged the union to keep up the good work they are doing, to organize societies whenever the opportunity afforded, and to keep alive that spark which was kindled in the hearts of the present workers. During the three weeks' campaign, he stated, he had presided at fifty-seven exercises and was instrumental in organizing several societies, both white and colored.
